PUERH TEA | Ripened (Cooked/Shu)

Produced in China's Yunnan province, Puerh tea perhaps has the longest history of any tea still produced today. There are two primary categories of puerh: raw (green or sheng) puerh and ripened (cooked or shu) puerh. Both teas undergo a series of processing, compression, and natural fermentation to enhance flavor and health benefits over long periods of aging.

2012 MANG FEI

Larger-leaf ripened puerh. A deep musty sweetness and smooth drinkability make this an affordable choice for quality loose ripened puerh.

CHRYSANTHEMUM PUERH

2005 Imperial Puerh blended with our own Golden Chrysanthemum blossoms. This is a high quality version of a popular blend that is commonly drunk in China for its benefit of cooling internal heat, according to Chinese medicine. The sweetness of the Chrysanthemum pairs well with the earthiness of the puerh. Soothing tea that can be rebrewed several times.
